Power to the People?

At the forefront of planning

The only residential conference that is specifically targeted at barristers, lawyers, planners and surveyors

Jointly organised by the Law Society, the Bar Council, the Royal Town Planning Institute and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, it is attended by over 200 practitioners from the four key professions that specialise in town and country planning.

This residential conference ensures a unique opportunity to learn and socialise in an informal environment and in the wonderful grounds of Oxford University - New College (accommodation), Balliol College (dinners) and the Oxford Union debating chamber (conference).

The mix of speakers, delegates, committee members and official guests provides a rare opportunity to discuss topical issues facing the property industry with experts in the field throughout the weekend (during the formal conference at the Oxford Union, breakfasts, lunch, dinners and drinks at the bar).

In addition to the presentations at the weekend, each speaker is required to produce a formal paper. These papers are widely used by delegates as seminal research in the field.

The conference is a not for profit event and is organised over the course of the year by a dedicated committee comprising representatives of the four professions. This ensures continually high quality and topical papers relevant to all.

Who should attend

Town planners, chartered surveyors, solicitors, barristers, developers and any professional with an interest in planning and environmental issues. Whether you are at the top of your profession or on your way up the ladder, there is something for everyone.

Why should you attend

- The leading annual planning law conference
- High quality speakers providing topical research papers
- Opportunity to discuss experiences with the best in the industry
- 10 hours CPD including access to post event podcast
- Unique networking opportunity
- Informal environment with practitioners
